Clampitt, Gaddis, & Buck are an acoustic five-piece from Portland, Oregon who pay homage to traditional American roots, country, bluegrass, and gospel with their soaring harmonies and stripped-down style. Erik Clampitt and vocalist Marley Gaddis started working together in October of 2002. With Clampitt on guitar and harmonica and Gaddis sharing vocal duties, they took their fragile sound and gimmick-free live show to stages around Portland.

In March of 2003, they expanded their sound by adding Sean "Buck" Burke on upright bass, mandolin, banjo, fiddle, and vocals. CG&B now boast two additional local talents making them a happy family of five: Matthew Stark of Power of County lends his banjo, mandolin, and vocal skills to the group, while Lucas Jones has stepped in for Sean behind the upright bass.

Reviews:

- Contemporary acoustic with traditional country influences. The performances are well-structured examples of contemporary folk music with a hint of country and bluegrass. In essence, Clampitt, Gaddis, and Buck prove to be quite entertaining, and "Nine Tracks" leaves us wanting to hear more from these folks. (Bluegrass Unlimited)
- The pioneers of country music, who are probably rolling in their graves because of the way the genre has gone, are probably smiling every time someone listens to "Nine Tracks", the aptly titled record from one of the Northwest's best kept secrets. I'll give it an A. (In Music We Trust)
